I used a downpayment program to buy my home and I am not a minority. I still live there too if that surprises anyone. I heard that FHA loans in combination with downpayment assistance have a 94% success rate. Why throw out all the success stories just because of a small percentage of defaults? That's like banning surgery for risk of infection. Sounds like this thread is on a witch hunt to me. Has anyone actually met or spoke to someone who lost their home because they used a downpayment program? I have yet to encounter a single testimony.
